

Consistent Beam Phase Space Measure for Matter-Dominated Lattices

Pavel Snopok

Illinois Institute of Technology, USA

Emittance, a commonly employed measure of beam phase space volume, is an inherently linear quantity in the sense that it is conserved for linear systems. In strongly nonlinear systems it is not conserved. The article discusses other measures for the beam phase space volume consistent with nonlinear dynamics that arise, in particular, in matter-dominated lattices.